NEW QUESTION: 3

Which statement about the OSPF Loop-Free Alternate feature is true?

- A. It is supported in VRF OSPF instances.
- B. It is supported when traffic can be redirected to a primary neighbor.
- C. It is supported when a traffic engineering tunnel interface is protected.
- D. It is supported on routers that are configured with virtual links.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Restrictions for OSPF IPv4 Remote Loop-Free Alternate IP Fast Reroute - The OSPF IPv4 Remote Loop-Free Alternate IP Fast Reroute feature is not supported on devices that are virtual links

headends. - The feature is supported only in global VPN routing and forwarding (VRF) OSPF instances. - The only supported tunneling method is MPLS. - You cannot configure a traffic engineering (TE) tunnel interface as a protected interface. Use the MPLS Traffic Engineering-Fast Reroute Link and Node Protection feature to protect these tunnels. For more information, see the "MPLS Traffic Engineering-Fast Reroute Link and Node Protection" section in the Multiprotocol Label Switching Configuration Guide. - You can configure a TE tunnel interface in a repair path, but OSPF will not verify the tunnel's placement; you must ensure that it is not crossing the physical interface that it is intended to protect. - Not all routes can have repair paths. Multipath primary routes might have repair paths for all, some, or no primary paths, depending on the network topology, the connectivity of the computing router, and the attributes required of repair paths. - Devices that can be selected as tunnel termination points must have a /32 address advertised in the area in which remote LFA is enabled. This address will be used as a tunnel termination IP. If the device does not advertise a /32 address, it may not be used for remote LFA tunnel termination.

- All devices in the network that can be selected as tunnel termination points must be configured to accept targeted LDP sessions using the `mpls ldp discovery targeted-hello accept` command.
